FATE IN THE FINGERS.

Variations of the Fingers and the Significance of Each Type.

People who reject as function the distinctions of Spurzhem and Lavater still believe that a man with a big brow is likely to be clover, and a man with a strong chin to be determined. Ordinary people do not get the same auggestions from the hand, and yet it may be empathe of affording them. The French professor says it is. We shall see wind at e the rules he lays down.

To begin with the fingers. The variations of these are not numerous, and any hand may be referred to one of some three or four types. These are the pointed fingers, where the finger tips are small and content and the the finger this are small and conical and the flagers themselves slock and soft. They are no uncommon possession, and admit of no doubt when they are found. It is said that they indicate a drawing disposition, a tendency to positio and speculate. Mon with such hands are enthusiasts and orators, have the gift of hangination very predigally bestowed upon them, but at the expense of common sense and knowledge of the world. Such hands are claimed for Shakespeare, Schiller, and Goethe, and certainly by Victor Hugo and Goetge Sand.

and theelin, and certainly by Victor Huge and theory Sand.

With the soft fingers and the conical tips there is no necessary alliance. The fingers may be sleek and the tips may be square, And this combination gives us another class of character. Here we have the tendency to art and poetry, but better under control. These are instructive rather than imagina-tive. The fine freizy gives place to an oye for symmetry and an ear for rhythm, and the the types are to be found in Mollore, Poussin, Vanban, and Taronno. It is a pity that we have no hiving examples fortrait-painters a nave no invite examples. For trait-painters a continy ago had a fashion of taking the face from the sitter and the hands from a favorite model. Vandyck's warriors, diplomatists, and courliers had nil procisely the same kind of fugers.

The fugers may be even more than square.

They may be spatialors, widened and rounded at the end like a chemist's blender or an at the end like a chemist's blender or an artist's pulette knife. This is a very practical land indeed, widely removed from the dreamer and the visionary, the hand of a man fond of movement and of action, the hand of a man fond of horses and dogs, and hunting and war fure, or, if he is more peaceable, of commerce and mechanism, a man of order and contrivance, a morehant, a financier, or, it may be, only a church warden. The patulous hand is generally found supplied with large finger knots; but where the fingers have no predominant joints the artistic character provails. Men act from impulse rather than from knowledge or reason. It is not faild down, however, that the tendency of the unnatism is to convert poets. to the and the property of the transfer of the transfer of the things to convert poets into politicians, though it painfully develops the knots of the fingers. Listly, there is a general rule that hargo hands deal best with distalls and short ones with general effect. It would be interesting to lest this by examin-ing the hands of the royal academicians. But the art descends into minuter detail.

Each of the fingers has its special character-istic, and a system of mythological nomen-ciature has been adopted, based on the attributed distinctions. The fingers known to us as first, second, third and little, are called respectively Jupiter, Satura, Apollo and Moreury, and it it is thought now getting into the region of the fantastic, it is only fair to the professor that his state-ment be heard and be tested. There is tanged across the pain of the hand a series of little cushions or hills, one at the base of each linger, but a little way from the thumb. Character lies in these, and the character may be told by their examination. The first fluger indicates ambition. If the mound is large, its owner will have a love of power coupled with a desire to shine, great power conjuct with a desire to sinke great-gayety, some pride, a tendency to supersti-tion, and a fondness for nature. If the mound be wanting, the life is one without dignity, the testes are common, and the man is narrow, soliish and interested. The second finger is said to control his life, as it shows the extent of his prudence and the proba-bility of his success. But if the mound be proternatural, we are to look for silence and solutarness -a Hamlet kind of disposition, sondamess—a ramos kind of disposition, verging on ascellesm. The third finger, however, supplies us with more cheerful reflections. It is the finger of the arts. It shows the presence of genius and the probability of fame. The man with a large mound mar his third linger will be amiable and hopeful—a delightful companion and an excellent friend. But if the mound be excessive, the results are disastrous. A love of notoriety converts the life into a vainglorious existnce, with a tendency to avarice and a cer-thin direction toward envy.

Listly we come to the little finger. It is the finger of invention, of industry, of quickeness, of ingenuity—the finger, probably, that makes us a nation of shop-keepers. It is the finance linger, and an overselvemental night even be found among the less attractive types of the British bankrupt, as it indicates therp practice, disastrous acuteness, dishonorable trickery, and a love of evasion

Primitive Jewish Weddings. (Cincinnati Enquirer.)

The primitive Joses do not appear to have performed any definite ceromonies at the wedding, yet they had some sort of a ratifi-cation of the vows of espensal. The day before the wedding the bride took a bath, before the westding the brile took a bath, which then, as in more modern times, was a smowhat formal precedure. The bride-groun on the westding day was arrayed in his most gorgeous attie, wearing on his heat office a turban or gold or silver crown, and sometimes one of flowers or leaves. He was also highly perfumed with myrrh and forthers. The train may a hour with shife heat a surface that the silver and some times the silver and the si fankmeense. The hude were a long vell which covered her from head to foot, indicative of her submission to her husband, a girdle and chaplet of gold or allver. The time of the the bidegroom, accompanied by his friends, and musicians and torch-borrers, wont to her boase and brought her and her party to his own or his father's house and shouts and sounds of joy At the bridegroom's house a feast was given, after which followed music and dancing, the male guests dancing around the bridegroom and the women around the bride. When a virgin married parehed corn oreulated among the guests to suggest the hope of fruitfulness and plenty. The last act in the Jewish wedding coremony was leading the woman, still veiled, to the both chamber, where a canopy, semethics a bower of roses and myrtles, was awaiting.

The wheels are not so much r carry one ton. *An old saying for a poorwife, EATING AT NIGHT.

Human boings become drowsy after a full meal. Why? Because blood is selicited toward the storach to supply the juices needed in digestion. Hence the brain receives less blood than during fasting, becomes pale, and the powers grow dormant. Sleep therefore ensues. This is physiological. Obeying, the moribund hady was soon sur-prised by a return of life and desire to sleep. The feeble will be stronger at dawn if they eat on going to bed. Au Awful Explosion-The Peabody Fund-Bloated Bondholders-Railroad Rates Restored -- Steamer Carrie Sunk-Patal Affray-Investigating an Invastigation Result of an Error-Other

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.-Mr. P. P. Wright. Chaliman of the General Time Convention of Railroad Mangers, in his call for the fall merting, to be held at the Grand Pacific hotel, in this city, Thursday October 11, time recommended for adoption at the meeting of this Convention and of the Southern Railway Time Convention, held last April, has been submitted to the several companies by the secretary. The managers of abou 60,500 miles of read have aircady voted in the allimative on both questions aubmitted. There are practically no nega-

The proposition is to divide the whole country into five divisions—the Intercolonini. 10 degrees west from Greenwich; the Eastern, 75 degroes west from Greenwich the Central, 90 degrees west from Greenwich; the Mountain, 105 degrees west from Greenwich; and the Pacific, 120 degrees west from Greenwich. Each division, it will be observed, is fifteen degrees apart, which makes just one hour in time. A present there are fifty different standards of country, which causes much annoyance and trouble. By the now arrangement there will be but five standards, each one hour apart, which will greatly simplify matters if adopted.

Nearly all the roads in this country and therefore quite cortain that it will be adops positively in the negative, and that was from a local coad in Canada. Some six or seven companies, operating with dependent lines about 15,000 miles of road, have not yet recorded their votes on the new proposition, but prominent officers of hose roads have expressed themselves personally as favoring the new system and its use upon their lines, providing it is gunerally adopted.

The proposition to divide the clock dials in twenty-four hours instead of 42 hours a. m. and 12 hours p. m. as at present, will also be discussed. By this arrangement 1 o'clock p. m. would be 13 o'clock, and 12 o'clock u. m. 24 o'clock. It is argued in support of this proposition that the present arrangement of designating the first 12 bouns of the day as a, in, and the last 12 hours as p. m. leads to much confusion, and under the new system no mistake can be made between nom, and point-
